

Downloading to municipalities

What They Promised

To improve service, end duplication, rationalize delivery, and enhance accountability for local services that were jointly funded by the province and municipalities.

What They Delivered

A thinly veiled attempt to cut provincial funding in order to free up money for the tax cut. The government’s so-called “Who-Does-What” initiative was billed as a cost-neutral exchange of responsibilities between the two levels of government. In the end, the provincial government downloaded over $800 million more in costs than it assumed.

What We Propose

The massive, unplanned, and idiosyncratic consequences of the Harris government actions have resulted in a more confusing and disruptive tangle of responsibilities. Provincial and municipal relationships must evolve through partnerships.

As a first step, our plan will respond to the immediate crisis by

- making the downloading closer to being cost-neutral by returning responsibility for social housing to the province, at a cost of $807 million.
- lifting the smoke screen of the attack on the standard of living of public sector workers caught in the downloading process. We will restore pension, successor, termination, and severance rights to workers who deliver public services.

The task of fully restoring local democracy, sound municipal financing, and a natural division of responsibilities must await a fuller analysis of the “Who-Does-What” impact.

What does the Ontario Alternative Budget do?

Our Budget does three things:

- One: It discredits the Harris government's claim that its tax cuts and fiscal policies have produced substantial gains for middle-income earners;
- Two: It documents the devastating impact of the Harris government policies on Ontarians; and
- Three: It proposes an alternative budget that would restore public services to their real per-capita 1995-96 level while eliminating the deficit by 2001-2002.

Problems

Contrary to government claims,

- the reductions in income taxes of $738 for the average family will have no positive impact, because provincial cuts in funding have led to increased user fees and property taxes, and other costs of at least $766. These new costs entirely wipe out the tax cut for three-quarters of Ontario's families.
- if there had never been a Harris government (no public spending cuts; no tax cuts), the budget would have been balanced in the 1998-99 fiscal year anyway, through increased revenues. We would be discussing instead how to spend the surplus, not what to do about damaged public services.
- nearly $2 billion has been cut from health care since Harris was elected, when inflation and population growth are taken into account.
- Harris government policies actually have held back job growth in Ontario. Ontario's job performance is entirely attributable to the lower Canadian dollar and growth in the U.S. economy.
- on a comparable per-capita basis, $570 per child has been removed from the public school system, totalling $1.2 billion.

Solutions

The Ontario Alternative Budget proposes to

- increase revenues in order to restore public services and balance the budget by 2000-2001. We can do this by restoring the tax cut that was given to the highest-income 20% of taxpayers, returning tobacco taxes to pre-1994 levels, and eliminating pointless tax breaks for business.

The Choice

The Ontario Alternative Budget shows that

- Ontario's deficit and public service crisis is not inevitable but the result of political choices made by a government that is not interested in the greater public good.
- it is possible to reverse the damage caused by the Harris government and repair our public services within a responsible taxation and fiscal framework.
